cation Project.

For the past 15 years, Sister Jeanne O'Laughlin, OP, has been beautifying and expanding the Barry University campus. Thanks to her, we now have more classrooms, more buildings, and the faculty has more offices. The interest now is shifting to physical beauty of the campus for the students, employees, and visitors.

The Grounds Beautification Planning Committee, along with Sr. Jeanne, is making this project happen. The committee chairs are Sister Margaret Johnson, OP, Vice President of "Planting," Research, and Evaluation and Dr. Judith Balcerski, Dean of the School of Nursing.

"On Monday, Oct. 14, Sr. Jeanne, Gene Autrey, Vice President for Institutional Advancement, and I met with Manny Diaz and his family and the deal was struck," said Sr. Margaret. "We came back and proudly announced that on Oct. 18, planting was to begin."

And so it did. Diaz donated the trees from his farm with the deal that Barry University was to pay for transportation and planting costs. So where is Barry getting the money for this? The money is not coming from student tuition, but instead, Sr. Jeanne is working her magic with exter-

What a view of the campus these days: dirt everywhere, yellow caution streamers, and construction trucks! What is going on? It is the Fall 1996 Beautifi-nal Barry University family members. "Sr. Jeanne has asked about 1500 people to donate $100 each," informed Sr. Margaret. The total cost for this project is an estimated $150,000.

As most projects of this type, there were a few minor set-backs.

"We are extremely pleased that there was little disruption with a project of this magnitude. Cable was cut off on two different days, but was repaired in time for the 8:00 p.m. movies and shows. Water service to Mottram Doss and Flood dormitories was interrupted for a two hour period," informed George Webb, "Dean" of Facilities Management.

"A chill-water break at the Library afected the air conditioning in Andreas and the Library for one evening."

Can anybody guess how many new trees there will be on campus once the project is complete? If you guessed 1500, you are right on target. Sr. Margaret has spear-headed a campaign to solicit volunteers to help watering these 1500 beauties. Staff and faculty members have been given designated areas to water and even students are encouraged to participate.

"The trees have exceeded our wildest dreams for quality," said Sr. Margaret. The plan is to have Diaz's farm come Roosevelt to win a second term as President. Bill Clinton's landslide in the Electoral College and impressive victory in the popular vote, crushing Bob Dole in most regions, has brought an end to this 1996 Presidential Campaign.

Ross Perot, the Texas tycoon who ran on the ticket of the Reform Party he had created, finished a distant third, receiving about half of the 19% he drew in 1992. Unlike four years ago for Mr. Perot, his message about eliminating the deficit and overhauling the campaign finance system did not loom in 1996. Additionally, because of his low numbers in the polls prior to election day, he was excluded from two Presidential debates. Both factors signaled an end to his role as a major political player in Ameri-

ers, Mr. Clinton won more support than four years ago. Even though the advocacy for the President did not penetrate deep enough to allow the Democratic Party to gain enough seats to produce a reversal of the present Republican House and Senate, nine new Democrats stormed into the House and one found its way into the Senate. An even greater achievement occurred in New Hampshire, where the first female Democratic Governor was elected.

What was most memorable about this campaign regarding Bob Dole was his resignation as Senate Majority Leader after three deacades in Congress and also his across-the-board tax cut plan which goes

With the elections now in hindsight, I'd like to shed some light on an Education Forum I attended a few weeks ago where Former-Vice President Dan Quayle spoke.

Quayle is one of the speakers I will have the opportunity to hear during the 1996-97 Forum Series sponsored by Nova Southeastern University. Invitations were sent to a mixed crowd of civic leaders in South Florida, including college/high school editors, as well as the general public, giving us an opportunity to hear and discuss current issues of politics.

While sitting at the media table, being the youngest one there, I was surrounded by owners of local magazines, privately owned and operated newspapers, and two of Quayle's campaign assistants. Somehow, I did a great job not feeling the least bit intimidated. The ambiance and company couldn't have been better. After engaging in small talk over breakfast, the tension eased a bit. Quayle's ice breaker of a joke didn't hurt either. But with all jokes aside, he knew why we were all there, expecting with baited breath, his objective, unbiased, nonpartisan, viewpoint on who the next President should be and how the congressional races are going to turn out.

I was impressed by his political jokes, but equally impressed with his speech. I know what you're thinking- he's a politician and not much more needs to be said. But, how he addressed the Q & A would put many to shame, not to mention the sincerity of his personal integrity and values.

Although Quayle has been out of office for three and a half years, he has remained politically active. The core of his speech stemmed from his deep emotions toward each party's participation. When generalizing over the Presidential campaign, he said that he is struck by the lack of energy and the lack of focus in the Presidential election by both the Republican and Democratic parties. He said there just isn't the intensity that's normally there. He said however we vote, we've got to be energized; we've got to have the intensity; we've got to be involved. It's our country. If we don't participate and things go the wrong way, who are we to complain?

I related totally to this concern for political apathy. A favorite political story of his, representing this attitude, follows: a man is asked, there are two things gripping our country today: Ignorance and Apathy. What do you think is more important? And the man replies- I don't know and I don't care.

We can't be like that. It's an awesome responsibility to be the President of the U.S., and it's even more of an awesome responsibility to live in today's challenging world.

Without sounding too preachy, I'd like for everyone to think about what they're doing and how they're achieving their goals. Are you challenging yourself to the best of your ability or are you only doing what's necessary to get by? Let's hope it's not the latter. Remember it does matter and there's no middle-of-the-road.

Clinton stresses transition into 21st Century

by Aaron Krause
Staff Reporter

On the afternoon of Tuesday, Oct. 22, Miami Dade Community College welcomed President Bill Clinton. President Clinton approached the podium and said that America should enter the 21st century with him and Al Gore in the White House.

Motivated by a speech given by Jerry Charles Sawyer Jr., President of the Student Government at Miami Dade Community College, Clinton was full of enthusiasm which seemed to spread throughout the crowd.

"Four years ago, Clinton ran for President because he was wary that the country wasn't ready for the 21st century," Sawyer told the crowd. With that in mind, Clinton spoke about a variety of issues with a particular focus on education. He emphasized the role the community colleges will play in helping to reshape America's educational programs.

"I believe community colleges work the way America has to work in the 21st century. It's open to all. This is the way America ought to work," he said.

After a cheer from the crowd, he spoke of his administration's personal ties to

Miami Dade Community College, "I actually have a member in my cabinet who went to school here and who's mother is in the audience."

One of Clinton's plans for education, should be reelected, is for classrooms to be more technology oriented. He unveiled his plan to hook up every classroom in America to the Information Superhighway. The President then said that the voters will play an integral role in determining whether or not his educational plans will be implemented.

Clinton also spoke about his plans for welfare reform, "We moved two million people from welfare to work. I've got a plan to create a million more jobs for people on welfare."

After the crowd settled down Clinton dismissed the notion that his administration is not tough enough on crime. Although he said this was accomplished to a small degree during his first term, he seemed confident that if given another chance he would be able to put even more officers on the streets. Rounding out the crime issue, Clinton said that children should not be able to attain illegal drugs under any circumstances and that he will enforce this if given a second term.

Finally, Clinton said he would focus on home owners in his second term. According to the President, the number of home owners has dramatically increased during his first term.

"If you give us four more years, we'll have even more homeowners," he said.

The President then left his audience with a useful analogy, keeping in mind the theme of his speech- "Building America's Bridge": "I have worked to reinforce the principals of responsibility," he said. "You will decide by how you vote; you will decide by whether you back in early December for maintenance of the trees and to replace any trees that have been damaged.

How does the project fit into the mission statement of Barry?

"One of the mission goals at Barry is to have a caring environment. This includes our physical environment. This is an expression of creating that environment because it's not just how we relate to one another," says Sr. Margaret. The plan isn't changing the soul of Barry, it is just improving the aesthetics, as suggested by Nancy Perez, Director of Purchasing.

Many e-mails have been received regarding this project.

"The vast majority have been oohing and aaahing the trees. They love the trees," claims Sr. Margaret. There have been some concerns about the change, but almost 100% of the people are satisfied.

HACU seeks intern applicants

PRESS RELEASE - The Hispanic Association of Colleges and Universities (HACU) is seeking applications for its sixth annual National Internship Program. HACU is recruiting college students to work as interns within various federal agencies in Washington, D.C. and locations throughout the U.S.

Building on the success of last summer's program, which placed 288 interns in internship assignments in Washington, D.C. and 24 states and Puerto Rico, HACU is expanding its partnership to include more federal government department/agencies, as well as corporate sponsors, and increasing its number and location of interns for 1997.

Currently enrolled students with a GPA of 3.0 or higher are eligible to apply. Applicants must be permanent residents or U.S. citizens.

The dates of the internships are from June 2- Aug. 8, 1997. Students will arrive in Washington on or before May 30, 1997 for an orientation program. Stipends and round-trip transportation to and from internship assignment are provided and HACU facilitates housing arrangements. The scale for stipends is: $370 per week for sophomore/junior interns; $410 per week for senior interns; and $490 per week for graduate/law interns. Stipend levels are determined by class status at the time of application. Additionally, HACU organizes a stimulating series of professional development workshops and seminars as well as various social and cultural activities.

Applications for the 1997 HACU National Internship Program may be picked up at the office of Dr. Jesus Mendez in Lehman 318. Applications must be post-marked by March 1, 1997, in order to be considered. However, due to the large demand for placement, early applications are strongly encouraged. The deadline for applications for the CIA and other high security positions is Nov. 15, 1996.

Physician's mission in Mexico

PRESS RELEASE - Four podiatrists and one podiatric resident from Miami are en route to Merida, Mexico on a mission to evaluate and correct deformities of disadvantaged crippled children in the State of Yucatan, Mexico. Twice a month, the team flies on weekends to Mexico to treat conditions such as post-Polio deformities, bone spurs, flat feet, clubfoot, and even genetic abnormality syndromes.

Headed by Dr. Charles Southerland, D.P.M., F.A.C.F.A.S., F.A.C.F.A.O.M., Professor of Podiatric Orthopedics and Biomechanics at Barry University School of Podiatric Medicine, the team began on July 4th weekend and have performed five scheduled surgeries at D'Hourin Hospital on children and juveniles (aging from 6 years to young adults). More than 150 other patients have been evaluated and treated by orthotic devices, prostheses, physical therapy, diagnostic tests, and coordination with other health care profession-

Many physical deformities of the foot and ankle experienced in the U.S., such as clubfoot, are corrected at birth due to the advanced medical techniques and health insurance available in the United States. Unfortunately, many children born with similar deformities in Mexico do not have the same opportunities for corrective surgery as in the U.S. The purpose of the Yucatan Crippled Children's Project is to work together with Mexican physicians and surgeons to provide just that opportunity.

According to Dr. Southerland, "the Project can perform a surgery for under $350 in expenses that would cost over $12,000 in the U.S."

More than 30 children are awaiting surgery and the team has already scheduled flights through May 1997.

Individuals interested in more info. on the project or making a donation to the project should contact Bob McKinlay, M.P.S., Director of Program Development at 899-3283.

Barry remembers Great Irish Famine

PRESS RELEASE-The worst famines in history have taken place this century. We have all seen shocking photos of starving African infants in Time and Newsweek. However, the worst of all known peacetime famines took place in Ireland from 1845-1850.

When the famine began, Ireland had a population of 8 million. The majority were tenant-farming families subsisting on a few acres and a single crop--the potato that had been brought to England and Ireland from Latin America by the English explorer Sir Francis Drake. In good times, the potato provided a healthy diet; a family could live for a year on the potatoes grown in a half-acre of rocky ground.

In 1845, a blight ruined the potato crop, first in Canada, then in Ireland. There was alarm in London and Dublin. Those who had other sources of food (corn or wheat), were able to survive. Those who depended on the potato began to suffer. Tenants unable to pay their rents were evicted from their farms, their rock homes demolished. The roads were soon filled with families with no place to go.

One million died of famine and famine-related diseases; two million were forced to emigrate to Canada, America, Australia. Nobody knows how many died in the "coffin ships" (unseaworthy, sickness-ridden boats) in which thousands made their escape.

Twenty years after the famine ended, Ireland's population had been cut in half.

The Great Irish Famine will be the focus of worldwide interest next year. One hundred thousand descendants of emigrants from Ireland are expected to attend a commemoration in Dublin on June 1.

Barry University will hold a day-long event on Saturday, Feb. 22, Washington's Birthday, to examine the famine, and celebrate some of its most famous emigrants to America. The event called "An Obligation to Remember" will be on campus in conjunction with the Irish American Unity Foundation.

Watch the Buccaneer for more information on this event.

against years of his own strong belief for deficit reduction. An added surprise within the Dole campaign was the selection of Jack Kemp as a running mate, an individual Mr. Dole had strained relations and quarrels with for several years. And nearing the final weeks of election day, after multiple public announcements expressing his reputation as a man of rectitude, he began attacking Mr. Clinton's character and ethical standards.

This election showed how voters are willing to set aside any concerns they had about Mr. Clinton's character and concentrate on their general perception that the country is heading in the right direction. Aside from these two factors that helped catapult the President into his second term, Mr. Clinton's popularity among women, which apparently resulted from the Republican Party's absolute stand against abortion, predominantly gave alliance to the Democratic Party. On Nov. 6, the New York Times bluntly reported that, "It was almost as if there were two elections, one for men, who gave Mr. Dole a majority, and one for women, who gave the President a larger one."

President Clinton addressed thousands of supporters in Little Rock, Ark., after he was guaranteed the 270 electoral votes necessary for reelection and gave thanks and praise to all those that stood by his side. Reminding us all that "we all belong to the greatest country in history." He expressed the fact that there is still much work to be done. With family and close friends at his side, the President acknowledged the affirmed course American's have chosen to follow into the 21st century. Quoting the last words of his campaign speech, "We must run our country the way we want to run our lives."

Celebrating David's life in Memorial Mass worship

by Joy Miskovich
Editor-in-Chief

On the afternoon of Wednesday, Oct. 17, a second memorial service took place in Barry's Cor Jesu Chapel to remember David Neftaly Quinones, a sophomore, political science major and soccer player who was a passenger in the ValueJet Flight 592 accident this past May in the Everglades.

Although a service took place immediately after the incident, a majority of David's immediate friends were already home for summer break. This past service gave closure to many who attended the mass by hearing others talk of David and his extraordinary personality.

One person who spoke highly of David during the mass is Ed Londono, Director of Campus Recreation, who David did work study for last year. Londono stressed how much hard work David always did. Since last year was Londono's first year as director, David was constantly assisting Londono in making his job easier by recruiting kids to come out for soccer.

"He would aggressively bang on students doors to get them to come out and play soccer," said Londono, "Since soccer was such a passion of his, it was easy for him to do."

The mass also aided Londono in dealing with the entire situation. Since the accident wasn't so fresh in everyone's minds, Londono said that it's easier to put everything in perspective.

"Although there's no way to prepare for it," said Londono, "Everyone expresses their grief differently."

When later talking with Londono he also emphasized that he now sees it's no longer necessary for him to try understand what happened, "now I can remember him as the remarkable person that he was."

Following Londono, others approached the podium to share a few memories. One individual, who made a significant impact on everyone, was Sophomore Lara Castro. Lara met David her Freshman year and shared great times with him. Lara's biggest concern, when looking back in retrospect on David's death, is thinking about what she hadn't done. She talked about how she's come to a better understanding of why such a special and close companion was taken away from her.

"I hadn't taken into consideration that, even though David was young, time wasn't on my side," said Lara, "Death can happen to anyone; not just someone sick or old."

Lara said that out of everything, this tragedy helped her to not take for granted the people she loves, and even her own life. She now wishes she would have told David what a great guy he was while he was alive.

"If I were to die tomorrow," said Lara, "would I be happy? Would I have lived? Now all I can do is live each minute to its fullest."

Father Emiliano Zapata, O.P., offered all who gathered at David's mass a sense of remembrance and a celebration of life. By joining us all together in worship, Fr. Emiliano said he's able to celebrate David's life with us and his new life in heaven.

A tree will be planted and blessed in David's memory in front of the Chapel. In addition to a tree, Londono, in conjunction with Campus Ministry, organized the first annual memorial soccer tournament in memory of David.

"A soccer tournament is my way of celebrating David's life," said Londono, "To me David was synonymous with soccer since he was able to remove himself from the competition, yet maintain his personality."

Each student contributed $1 to participate in the tournament, funds which the funds were given to Campus Ministry. The Memorial Cup Championship game was played on the afternoon of Saturday, Nov. 2. The tournament was originally scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 19, following the Memorial Mass, but it was postponed due to hurricane warnings issued throughout that week.

"Soccer was David's favorite form of expression," said Londono, "He played it with such passion and that will always be one of the things I will remember about him. My way of reinforcing his memory in my mind will be to honor him with this tournament and pass along an opportunity for others to play soccer."

SGA spooks all in 'The Crypt'

by Alicia James
Guest Reporter

The student body at Barry University witnessed the most talked about event on campus on Friday, Oct. 25- the Haunted House. The Haunted House is an annual event sponsored by the Student Government Association for Barry students and children from the neighboring schools free of charge.

This year's Haunted House was entitled "The Crypt" which represented the slight modification that the Haunted House went through during construction, a timely decision undertaken by SGA. Thus, the dedicated fans visiting the Haunted House year after year enjoyed a new twist to the terror in the basement of Weber Hall.

Intensive preparations for "The Crypt" were carried out over a period of three weeks, the last of which was dedicated to construction only. Although Student Government acted as the overseer for the construction of "The Crypt," the design and management of the various rooms was done by volunteers. Volunteers consisted of student representatives from various clubs and individuals who decided to share their creative talents through community service. Student Government provided the materials for the basic set-up of Weber basement while the clubs provided the materials for their own rooms.

"The Crypt" was open for both children from schools in the neighborhood and Barry students; approximately 400 to 450 people toured the Haunted House. The tour of "The Crypt" included approximately ten full sized rooms of horror and one long corridor of darkness which housed the creatures of the night.

All in all, "The Crypt" signified a job well done by the Student Government body and the host of volunteers that helped to make the venture a worthwhile experience. At the SGA executive meeting on Oct. 30 it was announced that the Barry Scuba Society will receive recognition as the club displaying the best overall effort and best room.

Bride-to-be, Senior Blair Germano, went all out for this year's Halloween dance.

It's just like the old days-Phish and The Grateful Dead

by Bill Petrell
Assistant Editor

In South Florida, the band Phish just hasn't caught on yet. Hailed in some places as the "next Dead" and in others as "just another jam band", Phish still deserves the recognition it receives. With the release of their last album, Phish gave fans a taste of their live shows on "A Live One", which featured the band at their very best, the live concert format. Now, on their latest album, "Billy Breathes", the band once again entices fans. The music on this album is as rustic as a New England farm. Radio friendly tunes blend into Phish's usual jams, as critics are hailing the new release as the band's best studio work to date.

The band begins the album with a song that will pick you up off the ground like any Phish song can incredibly do. "Free" begins with "I'm floating in the blimp a lot," a phrase that doesn't make that much sense, yet phrases like these are what make Phish so unique. "Waste," another remarkable song, brags to all, "don't waste your time with me," bringing feeling and flavor to the gentle melody which only Phish possesses. It's a true confession at heart, a plea for something greater.

"Prince Caspian," begins with a (Grateful) Dead-like vibe, a mystery slowly unraveled into a gentle melody. The intensity builds, feelings emerge from notes, and the groove is established. Then Trey comes in on vocals, strong, yet not overbearing, which is like giving the listener wings and setting him/her free in a field. The yearning guitar gives wind for the wings, and the rest is up to the imagination.

With the band's folky Vermont vibe and the picking skills of the kid with the banjo in "Deliverance", guitarist Trey Anastasio comes across as a veteran of song, a rider on the storm of life. Able to summarize feelings by picking the strings, music fans should definitely check out this release now in stores. Just like the band does in concert, the album can extend the listener's sense of music and extend the mind beyond the everyday pop-music with which the airwaves are flooded. Everyone knows that Jerry Garcia has long passed away, rest his soul, but I'm sure fans never figured that releases would keep on coming. Many live albums, such as "One from the Vault," "Hundred Year Hall" and "Dick's Pick's," would keep on coming. But guess again, Dead fans, there is more music to be heard and it can be found on the latest remastered album, "Dozin at the Knick", recorded at Knickerbocker Arena on March 24-26, 1990. Featuring everything the present Deadhead would need to get his daily fix of the band, this recording truly captures the band at its very finest, hands down. From the long "Space" jam to "Uncle John's Band", "Lady with a Fan," which jams right into "Terrapin Station," the music lets Dead shine brightly, exactly like they did on those nights.

Starting the show off with "Hell in a Bucket," the band takes off, pushing more and more on the rhythm. If you've never listened to the Dead, now is the time to get started with Phish. This album can serve as a great introduction to the Dead vibe; a vibe known for its live shows and long jams. It's all on this album.

VIDEO REWIND - Hate rules

by Roberto Latorre
Staff Reporter

Ok. Let me explain the headline. No, this is not a forum for Neo-Nazi discussion (I'm Panamanian, for God's sake!), it's still a video review column. You see the "Hate" I'm talking about is not the intense, gut-gnawing feeling you get whenever your roommate "forgets" to clean the bathroom, but rather the intense, gut-gnawing French movie that took both audiences and critics at this year's Miami Film Festival by storm: Mathieu Kassovitz' angry masterpiece "L'Haine".

"Hate"-the film's name in English- is a movie with a familiar theme: inner city kids trying to cope with life in the ghetto. But don't expect a Spike Lee re-make of Boyz'n the Hood; this urban drama takes place, not in the mean streets of New York or South Central LA, but in the outskirts of Paris and the City of Lights never looked this dark. In the film, a series of violent social outbursts have climaxed in an LA-like riot where one young slum kid is beaten to an inch of his life by the cops, and a single police-issue revolver is lost. The entire city tensely awaits to see whether or not the kid will die, and whether or not the violence will explode again.

This is where our protagonists come in. The movie chronicles the 24 hours following the riot in the lives of three young friends. Said, an Arab con-man (con-boy?) who is all-mouth and no action, Hubert, a black boxer with an intense desire to leave the life of the ghetto, and Vinz, a Jewish hot-head who recites lines from Taxi Driver (you talkin' to me?).

The acting is superb, but the cast is composed entirely of French actors who none of us would recognize, so I'll spare you the trouble of trying to remember their names. However, I will tell you they do the best thing any actor could possibly do: they are not there. That is, the only people you see on screen for the entire length of the movie are three utterly real, painfully convincing young men who are immersed in the desperation of their lives, who share the passionate energy of youth, and who choke on the acid anger of the slums. Every moment of their performances is spellbinding.

Nevertheless, the real star of the film is writer-director, Mathieu Kassovitz. He weaves together a tightly coiled script that bites like a venomous snake: the boys find the lost police revolver, and float through Paris trying to somehow direct with their aimless lives. The script is at times scary, funny, or pitiful, but always powerful: the boys clash with the upper classes at an art exhibition, hot wire a car only to realize that none of them know how to drive, get caught and tortured by brutal police officers, and beat the daylight out of a group of Neo-Nazis. The dialogue is fast and angry, peppered with curse words and racist remarks. Ultimately the driving force throughout the narration is their need for revenge: revenge against the police that beat and kill their own people, revenge against a society that forces them to the extremes.

Kassovitz produces a masterpiece of modern angry cinema. He shoots the film in stark black and white that exaggerates the geometric angles of the urban landscape, giving it the feel of a gritty, foreboding prison. The movie itself makes use of all kinds of creative techniques, from impossibly clever camera angles to almost impossible focus shifts to just plain impossible continuous 3 or 4 minute shots. Flashbacks, day-dreams and reality all blend into one big visual spectacle. The man must have been first in his film class.

The pacing is break-neck, almost hypnotic, toggling between those long, kinetic shots and a barrage of quick edits that almost flow into one another. What Kassovitz ultimately ends up with is a loud, fast two hour-long angst-fest that would make MTV proud; and that's not even remotely a bad thing. The movie packs visceral wallop like Chiquita packed bananas in endless, ripe bunches.

I understand that at first look, this film may not seem very appealing. Black and white foreign movies in French are hardly everyone's cup of tea. But trust me on this one: the monochromatic scheme actually improves the movie (remember Schindler's List?), and once you give the film a couple of minutes, the French and the subtitles will vanish. Forget about renting Happy Gilmore for the third time and try something a little more daring; in the end you'll have enjoyed an angry, technically perfect work of art that will leave you with the desire to give the world the finger... Geez, as if we didn't feel that way already.

FAST FORWARD:

On video right now or very soon:

Ahnuld What's-his-name-egger plays hero to Vanessa Williams' damsel in distress in Eraser (Oct. 26). Leslie Nielsen once again does the brainless-movie-parody-business he does so well in Spy Hard (Nov. 5). Ricki Lake gets her own dysfunctional family in Mrs. Winterbourne (Nov. 5). Rhea Pearlman (who?) re-makes dangerous minds on a basketball court in Sunset Park (Nov. 12). Basketball star Shaquille O'Neill proves that he can slam-dunk but not act when he plays a friendly genie (?) in Kazaam (Nov. 19). Demi Moore shows some skin -and no restraint- in Striptease (Nov. 19). And some pesky aliens try to barbecue Will Smith and Bill Pullman when Independence Day (or, if you prefer, ID4) invades video stores Nov. 22.

There, that should keep you busy until those nasty finals start cutting into your leisure time. Until next time, stay safe and remember- Be Kind, Please Rewind.

Clinton Obtiene Victoria

Por Frank Alvarado

El Presidente Bill Clinton fue re-elegido a su cargo con el 49% del voto popular y con 373 votos electorales. Clinton es el segundo presidente demócrata en ser reelecto al cargo desde Franklin D. Roosevelt en 1936. También es el segundo presidente en ganar un segundo mandato después de la Segunda Guerra Mundial; el otro fue Ronald Reagan.

Clinton ganó muchos de los estados importantes, incluyendo a la Florida que no ha votado por un candidato demócrata desde 1976. Su adversario republicano, Bob Dole, concedió su derrota de mal humor. El veterano de la Segunda Guerra Mundial dijo, "Yo he dicho varias veces durante esta campaña que el presidente es mi opositor, no mi enemigo. Le deseo buena suerte y le doy mi apoyo".

El tercer candidato, Ross Perot, ganó el 8% del voto popular, diez menos que en 1992. El billionario de Texas dijo que continuará a luchar contra los intereses de los republicanos y los demócratas. "Tenemos que seguir presionando al gobierno", declaró Perot.

Clinton tendrá que trabajar con un Congreso mayoritariamente republicano; también le espera una indagación sobre las contribuciones a su campaña electoral. Muchos creen que Clinton ganó gracias a la economía, mas muchos americanos opinan que el presidente no ha sido honesto sobre varios temas.

En una encuesta de la opinión pública por el Servicio de Noticias para Votantes el 12% de los entrevistados dijo estar animado con la segunda vuelta de Clinton; el 55% afirmó no creer que Clinton es honesto y el 60% cree que el presidente no ha dicho la verdad sobre Whitewater.

El Modernismo Mexicano en el MOCA

por Frank Alvarado

En celebración del Mes de la Hispanidad, una estupenda muestra de Modernismo Mexicano se exhibe en el MOCA (Museum of Contemporary Art), a sólo unos minutos del plantel de Barry. MOCA presenta Mexican Modernism from the Jacques and Natasha Gelman Collection, que incluye obras de maestros mexicanos como Frida Kahlo, Diego Rivera, José Clemente Orozco, David Alfaro Siquieros, Rufino Tamayo, Carlos Mérida, y Gunther Gerzso.

MOCA, junto al Museo de Arte Moderno de San Francisco, es uno de los dos museos en los Estados Unidos que ha presentado esta exhibición. La muestra, que continúa hasta el primero de diciembre, fue organizada por el Centro Cultural/Arte Contemporáneo, Fundación Cultural Televisa, A.C. México y fiado por el Concilio Federal de las Artes y las Humanidades.

Quizás las obras más conocidas sean las de Frida Kahlo. La exhibición cuenta con varios de sus autorretratos, incluyendo Diego en mi pensamiento, que expresa el amor por su esposo Diego Rivera, Autorretrato con monos, que simboliza su fertilidad frustrada, y la colorida La novia que se espanta de ver la vida abierta. El museo también presenta vídeos sobre la vida de Kahlo y Rivera.

Al ver las diferentes obras uno capta las emociones de los pintores. Uno siente la angustia de Kahlo por su incapacidad de procrear, uno se identifica con el nacionalismo de Rivera y Tamayo, y uno capta la mortalidad de José Clemente Orozco.

Las pinturas de Diego Rivera incluyen retratos de los Gelmans, su Girasoles, que muestran dos niños jugando bajo la sombra de girasoles y a Niña con guantes que muestra una niña mexicana de piel morena en traje típico. La muestra también cuenta con varias pinturas de los cubistas Carlos Mérida y Gunther Gerzso.

El Movimiento Modernista Mexicano comenzó en los 1920s expresando la vida y tradición de México. Jacques y Natasha Gelman, emigrantes rusos, comisionaron obras de estos pintores para su colección. Son estas pinturas las que integran la muestra del MOCA.

La muestra se puede visitar hasta el primero de diciembre en el MOCA, 770 NE 125 St.

Feliz día de acción; Barry Conmemora la Sida

Por Mireya Novo

El domingo primero de diciembre, los estudiantes de Barry llevarán a cabo una ceremonia de recordación del Día Internacional del Sida. Al igual que el año pasado - cuando la noticia causó tanto impacto que la foto apareció en la primera página del Miami Herald - decenas de estudiantes formarán una gigantesca cinta roja, símbolo de la lucha contra esta devastadora enfermedad.

La ceremonia se iniciará con una misa a las 8 de la noche. La familia del joven cubanoamericano Pedro Zamora, fallecido activista contra el sida, narrará sus experiencias personales. Pedro Zamora contrajo sida cuando era adolescente y más tarde se convirtió en un enérgico activista contra la enfermedad; su misión primordial se volvió alertar a la juventud sobre los peligros del sida. Pedro ofreció múltiples charlas en planteles estudiantiles y adquirió fama nacional como protagonista de "The Real World", un programa de MTV.

La estudiante salvadoreña Mónica Espinosa ha diseñado una camiseta conmemorativa que estará a la venta en el vestíbulo Thompson. Parte del dinero recaudado por medio de la venta de camisetitas le será presentado a Sister Edita Rojo, directora médica de Génesis, un hospicio para pacientes desamparados con sida que cuenta con el apoyo de la Arquidiócesis de Miami.

Sister Edita es graduada de medicina de la Universidad de La Habana. "Desde niña me gustaba curar", recuerda con satisfacción, "siempre quise ser médico." Desde que salió de Cuba en 1961, Sister Edita ha trabajado con enfermos mentales en Colombia y en el Centro Hispano Católico de Miami, donde se les ofrecía ayuda a los inmigrantes hispanos. Sin embargo, ha sido en Génesis que la religiosa ha encontrado su mayor desafío. La situación económica del hospicio fue precaria desde el comienzo. "No me pregunten cómo Génesis se ha mantenido abierto, porque no les sabría decir", confiesa. Ayudemos a que este proyecto continúe funcionando, ya sea comprando una camiseta u ofreciendo una donación al hospicio.

Estudiantes aprenden sobre el alcoholismo

por Marissa Govin

Durante el mes de octubre, Barry le dedica una semana a educar a los estudiantes sobre el alcoholismo. La meta es mostrar los efectos malignos del alcohol y darles a los estudiantes la oportunidad de participar en una diversión sobria.

En el pasado, los estudiantes encontraron un misterioso auto chocado frente al vestíbulo de Thompson Hall. La conclusión: el choque fue ocasionado por muchachos bajo la influencia del alcohol.

Como parte de esta campaña se distribuyeron panfletos y regalos con información sobre los peligros del alcohol. El Club de Teatro presentó obras originales sobre el alcoholismo y otros temas relacionados en la Sala Houndstooth. También estuvo presente un representante de Alcohólicos Anónimos quien habló de su experiencia con el alcoholismo.

Asimismo, se celebró una fiesta sin bebidas alcohólicas con música de los grupos Dr. Rock, Earth Citizens, and Sweet Nut.

Los eventos mostraron que los estudiantes pueden pasar un buen rato sin necesidad embriagarse.

Volleyball picks up the pace for a repeat of last year

Liz Bates
Staff Reporter

Although they had a rough start, the 1996 Women's Volleyball Team are proving themselves to be both mentally and physically tough.

Coming into the new season, the Lady Buccaneers had a team consisting of nine players. Seven out of the nine are returnees from last year's team, only two of which were in the starting lineup.

The 1996 team members are: Captain Anita Garnett, Megan Yeomans, Michelle Heuton, Janina Morusiewicz, Dana Block, Elvira Vakhidova, and Cindy Yuan. New recruits are junior transfer Liz Bates and freshman Kim Kupfer.

Another change in the system is a new coach, Dave Nichols. Nichols brought in a completely different system and it took the ladies some time to get used to the change.

"The biggest change since the beginning of the season is attitude. In the beginning people were going in a lot of different directions with a new coach and new philosophies. Now we're all on the same page," said Nichols.

Currently ranked No. 16 in the nation, the Lady Bucs have earned their way into the rankings by conquering an extreme schedule. The Bucs won three conference matches in 24 hours. The weekend of Sept. 20-21 Barry played North Florida on Friday night and then Rollins and Florida Tech the next day. Soon after their triumphant weekend, the Bucs suffered a tough loss to Division I Central Florida.

Coach Nichols said the turning point of the season was the loss to Central Florida.

"We brought out our best and our worst in that match," said Nichols, "forcing the coaching staff and the players to look at things together and to commit to improving both ends. Focus and consistency has been honored by both sides."

The next battle that the Lady Bucs faced was the Florida Southern Tournament on the weekend of October 11 and 12. The Nichols. Bates has 933 assists, which is already the second best single season total in Barry history.

The next big match was the battle against Tampa for first place in the Sunshine State Conference (SSC). Since Barry had two matches scheduled that day (St. Leo at 12 p.m. and Tampa at 7:30 p.m.) they decided to drive up Friday night. Two hours into for our team. They remained in high spirits and had fun, rather than worrying about their lack of sleep. Not one person complained."

To say the least, Barry put it into overdrive that Saturday winning both matches 3-0, each match lasting only about an hour.

Throughout this winning streak, two of Barry's players have been named SSC player of the week. Cindy Yuan with a hitting percentage of .309, and Elvira Vakhidova with a hitting percentage of .324.

Barry's record is now 20-8 and 9-1 in the SSC with only four conference matches remaining. Regionals will be held over the weekend of November 22, and Nationals will be on December 6, 7, and 8.

Bucs proved to be a motivated team by winning all four tournament matches, as well as a conference match that Sunday. One of the tournament matches was against No. 10 ranked New Haven with a 28-0 record, until Barry beat them in three straight games.

The next weekend, October 18 and 19, was the Tampa Tournament consisting of region teams. Barry swept through the four matches, all of them 3-0. Barry moved their record up to 18-8, having won their last nine consecutive matches. Sophomore Cindy Yuan led the Bucs against Tampa with a phenomenal .625 hitting percentage and 28 kills. Junior Elvira Vakhidova backed Yuan's effort with 21 kills. Junior Liz Bates has "dialed in", running the Bucs sophisticated offense, according to the road trip the bus broke down under an overpass on the side of the freeway. The driver quickly called for another bus. The team was told that it would only be an hour and a half for it to arrive. At that time it was 11 p.m. The bus didn't show until 3:30 a.m. and the team didn't get to their hotel until 5 a.m.

"The funny thing," said Coach Nichols, "is that the mishap was the biggest growth

Sports Briefs

Women's Soccer-The team will face #1 Lynn University in the quarterfinal match of the NCAA Division II tourney. This is their ninth NCAA post-season bid in the past 10 years. The game will take place in Boca Raton on Nov. 16 at 1:00 p.m. If the Bucs win, they will advance to the NCAA Final Four, November 22 and 24. Coach Brian Dooley said, "We felt like we could win it this year initially, but we had a few setbacks, but this team didn't give up."

Men's Soccer-The team closed it's season on Saturday, November 9, by hosting Florida Southern at 2:00 p.m. at Buc-caneer Field. The Bucs, who were ranked as high a #9 in the national poll, lost three of the past Sunshine State Conference games. Two graduating seniors were honored on Saturday, Rex Motes and Shane Haines, in pre-game ceremonies.

Barry's football team takes on the University Of Florida

by Bill Petrell
Assistant Editor

It was hot news all across the Barry campus—a football team from Barry was going to play a team from University of Florida. Could this be true? It was, and while it lasted, it was beautiful.

The best of the best from Barry (Intramural football) were selected to go to Gainesville to compete in the 5th annual Swamp Bowl at the University of Florida. And, by luck of the draw, they were scheduled to face a strong Gator team, Air It Out Too. And as fate would have it, the tournament director Edmund Boyd played on that very same team. It was going to be a tough one for the Bucs.

"The Swamp Bowl has grown to be a big event here at U.F.," said Boyd, "Good talent is always here, and it has been growing ever since we started this thing. The proceeds all go to charity and this year's foundation will be the Boys and Girls Club of Gainesville."

It all began in the parking lot of the luxurious University Inn, where warm-ups were held. The air was tense and pulses were pounding. Quarterback Vince Tarini showed quick speed, while his two roommates Bret Kelly and Keith Martin looked on, both breathing heavily from their own wind sprints. Even Campus Recreation Director Ed Londono, the team's coach, showed NFL-like coaching skills with his simulated exercises. The team was ready, and Barry pride was flowing through their veins. "Let's do this right, boys," someone said as they all boarded the team van.

As the bus made its way through the campus, players looked upon the great University of Florida. Awestruck, they hopped out of the van just in time to be blown away once again by the sight of a ladies game taking place under the lights of the field. Plays being perfectly executed and an occasional spectacular lateral or two kept the boys entertained until game time. Game time came and went, but the spirit in the parking lot, was nowhere to be found. The Gator team, came out confident, the Barry team did not.

Under a full moon, the Barry team took the ball, but were out in three, forced to punt. John McLaughlin, the punter, had mentioned earlier in the van that he had been struggling and that he felt unsure of himself. But there was pride as stake, he was going to have to suck it up and do his best. After all, it was only intramurals, right?

Well, John didn't break any records on that punt, but it wasn't blocked, so it was successful. Now it was Florida's turn, time to show Barry who was boss, and that's exactly what they did. The score got pretty high by the end of the half, but that didn't mean that the boys from Barry were going to quit. They just dug down deeper and summoned strength to face the second onslaught that Air it Out Too dished at them. These guys have been playing for a year or so, and we've only been playing together for a week," Ed commented at the half.

The final score was 39-0, but it didn't tell the story of the guys who came from a school without a football team and won their own game. Kelly recorded the team's only sack and Chad Schilling had an interception. Bad calls plagued the team, but

Chad Schilling, both breaking up the sidelines. Tarini could pass to either one of them. Keith Martin fended off the incoming rush like a Pro-Bowler. Colin McCoy broke into the middle and Ron Johnson ran his pattern. Ponkey followed up the middle as Tarini looked cool under the hot sun. Looking like Joe Namath, Tarini faded to the right and let it fly. Schilling was the intended receiver and his coverage slacked until he realized that the ball was coming that way. Schilling extended, but it was too late. The ball bounced helplessly, they went down fighting.

Early the next morning, the reinforcements arrived. Ron Johnson and Pete Quattro both caught the late bus to the University of Florida.

Against FAMU at 9 a.m. the next morning, the team had its best showing. It was a great game, by far the best of the three played by the team, but once again they came up short 13-7. Chad Schilling ran one in on a reverse that had the defense befuddled. FAMU scored their last touchdown on a controversial running play. It appeared as though the running back had stepped out of bounds. "He was way out of bounds, but the ref who was standing right there missed the call," said Londono after the game.

"Good calls and bad calls are part of the game. We just knew to keep playing and staying focused," said Ron Johnson. Excellent performances were turned in Dan "Curtains" Ponkey and John "Clocked" McLaughlin.

"Winning and losing is irrelevant when sending a team up here (Gainesville) for the first time. Sure, all these guys want to win and it showed it in how hard they played, but it's the exposure they get, and in turn, the University gets," said Londono, "Funding was a bit of an obstacle, but in the future, our office (Campus Recreation) will work to subsidize these kind of trips even more so it is possible to offer additional extramural activities in different sports."

The boys headed back to the extravagant Inn and some retired to their rooms to catch up on some sleep. Two hours later, the team returned to the hot, dusty field on the University's campus. This time they are playing a team sponsored by a cajun restaurant outside of Tampa.

It looked like the beginning scene in "Platoon," dust blowing, and everyone in the picture with a glaze of sweat on their brow and once again, the fates blowing carelessly in the wind. Barry's opponent for this game was the Mud Bugs. The intensity was high simply because these guys wanted to put one up in the winning column. The team seemed more together, their experiences the night prior forming a close bond between all.

In the first half, the team looked sharp and focused, yet at other times looking dazed and confused, but it was the same case for the other team. On some plays, the Mud Bugs looked like one hell of a team, yet on others, nothing better than a Pop Warner mites team.

With their backs up against the wall in the second half and trailing by the score of 21-0, the boys from Barry gained possession at their own 25 yard line and the march was on to the goal line. The team was rolling right down the field. Finally, the Mud Bugs pushed their way out of the darkness and it appeared as though they were going dust billowing around it. That was it, the end of game. The Mud Bugs took possession and let time run out. It was over.

It seems like that one play summarized the whole trip. Here are these guys, underdogs, trailing by however-many points, but it didn't matter to them. Still they always gave it their all. Everything they had, they gave, because they didn't know if they'd get to do it again.

"You can't teach heart, and that's what everyone on this team has. They never gave up, never, no matter what the score was. And on that last fourth down play, it didn't matter if Chad had caught the ball, it mattered if we were going to give the 110% that I know each and everyone was capable of," exclaimed an excited John McLaughlin in the van.

"Events like these give students a chance to bond and interrelate in ways that aren't possible in the classroom. To me, these are some of the worthwhile experiences these young people will remember for a long time," said Ed Londono.

"It was fun to go up against some real tough competition. I met new people and became friends with my teammates," said Chad Schilling.

to make a defensive stand. But fate wasn't on their side as Tarini completed a 25 yard pass for a first down. The team was excited and spectators could clearly see it on their faces. But a flag was thrown, killing any chance of the success that the players had sweated for. Success was right there in front of them, yet they could not reach it. Three plays later, on a gutsy fourth down, the players lined up and waited for the signal. There was one last chance to shine.

Bret Kelly burst off the line and so did
