High Expectations for This Year's Founders' Week

JASMINE BERRY
JASMINE.BERRY@MYMAIL.BARRY.EDU

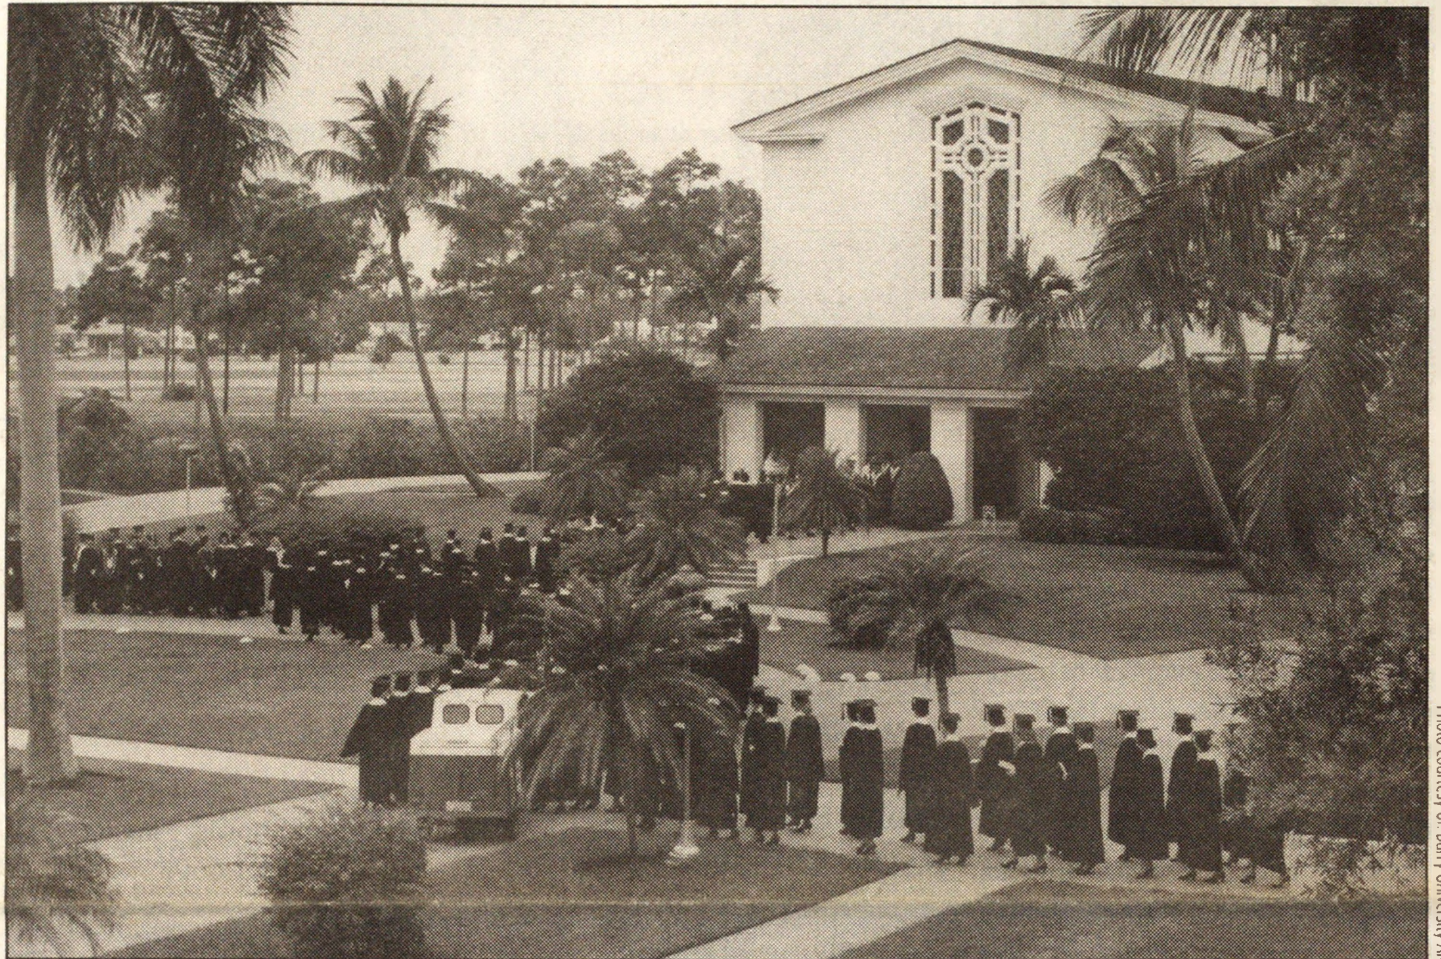

As part of Barry's annual Founders' Week celebrations, the Andy Gato Gallery will be filled with the new Archives Exhibit, just one of the many events planned for Nov. 7 through 13.

The exhibit will include historic paintings and photographs of Barry students, faculty, buildings and events since the university's founding in 1940. The Living History Presentation will feature Barry students demonstrating the fashion changes throughout the decades at Barry.

"This year we are doing a week long of activities basically commemorating the historical mission, Catholic identity and Dominican heritage of Barry University," said Greta Moncayo of the Organizational Effectiveness Program, which was established to support change and improvement efforts at the university.

Health Center Tests for Swine Flu, Offers Preventative Tips

Brian Littrell from the Backstreet Boys, CNN's Dr. Sanjay Gupta and Rupert Grint from the "Harry Potter" movies have all had it. And so do a group of Barry students.

The H1N1 virus, commonly known as the swine flu, has spread to 74 countries and is considered a phase-six pandemic by the World Health Organization (WHO).

The first few weeks of school were busy for the Barry Student Health Center, according to Clinic Coordinator Candice Hill, RN, MHSA.

Although Hill could not say exactly how many cases the Student Health Center saw, she said her best guess was about 50% of students who took the flu test had Influenza A, another name for H1N1.

"College age students are particularly vulnerable to this virus," said U.S. Secretary of Health Kathleen Sebelius in a conference call to various college media outlets in September. "Older Americans seem to have an immunity to this flu."

Freshman Ty-Shel Sasso picks up a brochure on swine flu in the Student Health Center after a checkup. Students can pick up information on swine flu, other illnesses and other services provided at the Student Health Center.

One theory for why young adults are more susceptible is that older adults, especially those over 65, might have been exposed to similar strains and are more resistant to this strain.

According to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), the common seasonal flu causes 36,000 deaths annually. While the current tolls from H1N1 have not reached those numbers, Miami-Dade County alone has recorded 25 deaths and over 300 hospitalizations, according to an Oct. 13 story published in the Miami Herald.

Although the first weeks of school were busy, the number of students going to the Student Health Center for flu-like symptoms has since dropped to what is considered normal for this time of year, said Hill.

On the Barry Web site, a Self-Triage flyer explains how to handle the flu, depending on the severity of symptoms. Both commuters and residential students are advised to follow the instructions.

"The treatment for H1N1 is the Letter From the Editor

Students are not just students; they are fathers, mothers, full-time employees and even care providers. But in the classroom, does any of this matter?

It is not an uncommon site for students to refer to their busy lives as reason for not doing well academically. How should this situation be interpreted? Despite other time-consuming commitments, should students manage to complete all their academic tasks to the best of their ability? Or should some consideration on the part of the professor take place?

In a perfect world, students would just focus on school, taking the time to embrace and become engulfed in their studies. Unfortunately, students do not live in a perfect world, but a place characterized by a confusing and stressful blend of scholastic duties, work commitments and family responsibilities.

Students often lose focus on their studies and become simply preoccupied with doing whatever possible to achieve a decent grade, regardless if they actually learned anything.

Likewise, when life becomes overwhelming, students are quick to lament professors for complicating their lives with academic burdens. And of course, the hackneyed complaint of students: Don't professors realize we are taking other classes?

Like every story, there are two sides. Imagine the frustration a professor experiences when their students don't complete the homework or study for a quiz. Lesson plans become useless when students do not complete the homework assignment necessary to understand the related lecture.

In keeping with the tradition of the university, many professors reach out to students who are having difficulty in the classroom. The result of such a conversation? Students describe to professors a plethora of reasons why they haven't been working too hard in the classroom:

I work full time and can't find the time to study; my mother has been sick, and I have been taking over the household chores.

With this information, what should a professor do? Is it ethical to offer students a break when life has becoming overly stressful? Or should the professor stick to their classroom and nothing more?

Professors do not give grades, rather students earn them. With that said, students should take the initiative to communicate the issues that may be detracting from their education while still showing a keen interest in the classroom.

Cheers,

The Barry Buccaneer is undergoing some changes, improving both the paper and its Web site. As the paper improves and grows, so does the need for additional contributors and staff members. Many positions on staff are available and will become available in the future.

In an effort to recruit and reward students, The Barry Buccaneer will be paying students for the following published contributions: articles, photographs and cartoons.

All current students at the university are encouraged to contribute, as The Barry Buccaneer should be representative of the interests, academic and otherwise, of the entire Barry community.

The newspaper needs reporters, writers, cartoonists, photographers, graphic designers and computer savvy web designers.

Several of the current staff members are graduating in December and their positions need to be filled. In addition, each editor is looking for an assistant. Assistant positions will provide an excellent foundation for becoming an editor in the future. All students are eligible to apply for staff positions.

Positions at The Barry Buccaneer provide students with valuable experience to enhance their résumés, and potentially receive letters of recommendation.

Students looking for experience in their respective field of interest should consider joining the staff. Writers can attain clips that are crucial to attaining internships and jobs. Having your work published is a valuable resume builder, among the many other benefits associated with joining a college newspaper.

Interested applicants should email their résumé and a brief cover letter to samantha.stanton@my-mail.barry.edu.

Recession Forcing Students to Change Spending Habits, Plans

D'JOUMBAREY MOREAU
DJOUMBAREY.MOREAU@MYMAIL.BARRY.EDU

Scarce job opportunities coupled with a lack of steady income are making it difficult for students to cope with college-related expenses, principally high tuition costs. During this economic downturn, students are changing their habits to cope with the crisis.

Barry graduate student Lorean Mapp says she is "more cognizant" of her spending habits.

"I just try not to spend money frivolously," said Mapp.

Rather than buying the early morning iced mocha from Starbucks, or spending money at AMC Aventura, students are learning to distinguish between needing and wanting something.

"I got to make sure I get the things that I need," said sophomore Randy Fabre. "I'm one of the people who has to contribute for my family to survive, so I buy groceries."

Since the flow of income has become scant, students are making more sensible spending decisions.

"I'm wiser when it comes to spending money than I was before," said junior Rolenda Lindor. "I used to spend money without thinking, but now, I only spend money on things that I need. Even some of the things that I need to survive, such as food, has even become a struggle to attain. I'm living paycheck to paycheck..."

The struggling economy has also affected students' living situations, especially those hoping to move off campus. Senior Karl Liggin says living off campus would require students to get a job to combat the related costs, but with job opportunities few and far between, students are not able to make the move.

"This year I was planning on living off campus and becoming more independent, and then I applied for five jobs and never got a call back. Then, I realized I'll be living on campus this year," said sophomore Kelly Hough.

In addition to living expenses, students are also concerned about covering tuition costs.

"Without financial aid, I would not be in college," said Lindor.

Liggin said the recession has forced him to take out new loans to cover tuition.

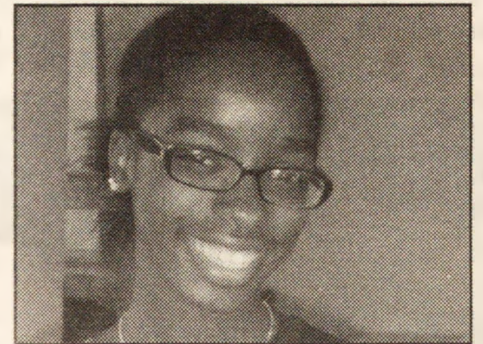

Despite struggling to pay for school-related expenses, some students are considering continuing their education since landing a job after graduation seems unrealistic.

"[The recession] has made me second guess going straight out into the job market. I have also thought about pursuing a Ph.D. since there are not a whole lot of options out there for recent graduates," said Mapp. "It is a scary time for recent grads because people with more experience are out of jobs and are looking for the same ones that we are."

Entrepreneurship 101: Q&A with New Entrepreneurial Director

MARIA BLANCO
MARIA.BLANCO@MYMAIL.BARRY.EDU

Philip H. Mann is the director of the Entrepreneurial Institute at Barry University. He received a bachelor's degree and a master's degree from the University of Miami and his doctorate from the University of Virginia. In addition to having owned three successful businesses, he worked at the University of Miami for 24 years as assistant dean of the Division of Continuing and International Education, and spent eight years at the Florida International University School of Business Administration. He and other members of Barry's Entrepreneurial Institute are developing a booklet on how to start a business that will hopefully be available to students within a year.

What made you interested in entrepreneurship?

It's a long story, and it starts about 29 years ago. I was working at the University of Miami as a professor in the business school and also working with the president in 1983, and there was a civil disturbance. A man was killed by the police within the African-American community; a lot of businesses were burnt down. The president of the university said to me 'we need to do something to help these communities.' So, we held community meetings to find out what the community needed. And the community asked for more access to information about businesses and opportunities to learn about owning a business, so that's how I got into the community business area.

What skills do you believe are essential in order to become a successful entrepreneur?

One of the skills is a mindset that results in a desire to get ahead. Many of the skills are psychological and emotional skills, not everybody is suited to go into business. They have to be willing to take risks. And you have to be willing to be an innovator.

What would your advice be to students who are struggling with finance loans and wish to pay them off as soon as possible?

If you owe the government or anybody else a large sum of money and the payments of that debt are too severe for you to deal with, then you have to call that agency and negotiate that debt for a longer period of time for less money, or negotiate the debt down. Now people don't know how to do that. They run away from debt. You're better off if you face that person and say I do have a debt and I want to pay it off. Let's figure out the best terms for me to do that.

What advice would you give students on how to determine if this class would be a good choice for them?

Well one of the things you could do is talk to other students. Students are very honest so they'll tell you, "I learned something. I didn't learn something. What helped me." The other thing you could do is go to the library and get the textbook. There should be a copy of the text somewhere in the library, look through it because that'll give you an idea of what some of the content is like.

How do you plan to go about reaching out to the students?

Number one, I have a list of services. Students can come in and discuss a business plan, a marketing plan, discuss their product or service. I offer 10 seminars that are open to the community and the students here in the evening from 7:30 at night to 9:30. Another thing is we just put out a book that you can download. It's called "Protecting Your Financial Future." Some topics include how to do a budget, how to manage debt, understanding your credit score and many more.

What should students who want to become entrepreneurs after college do to prepare themselves to succeed?

One of the things I really believe in is experience. Nothing speaks as well as experience for anything anyone wants to do. Students come to me. They want to go into business, but they have no experience in the area that they are looking at... My response to that is to get experience any way you can, even if you have to work for nothing for a while.

Entrepreneurship professor Dr. Mann explains to junior Gilliana Canelo the importance of managing her financial future. Dr. Mann comes to Barry having previously worked at the University of Miami and Florida International University.

New Priest Arrives with Past Experience in Nicaraguan Civil War

AUDREY GENAUTIS
AUDREY.GENAURIS@MYMAIL.BARRY.EDU

All eyes were curious as Barry's new priest walked down the aisle at the Cor Jesu Chapel to begin his first campus Mass. His sermon was a story about finding one's place in a new experience, a common theme throughout his life.

Rev. Marcelo Solórzano was born and raised in Nicaragua. During the Nicaraguan Civil War in the 1970s and 1980s, he was sent to stay in Michigan, where his brother still lives. After being separated from his parents, he realized that his heart was set on God for peace, justice and hope.

"I remember waking up at night and thinking my parents were over there [in Nicaragua] and wondering if I would ever see them again, but God got me through," said Solórzano, referring to his early years in Michigan.

After the civil war, he returned to his parents' home in Nicaragua, and was disappointed with what he saw. In his opinion, the efforts of the revolution were fruitless, representing the beginning of the same. He thought the Nicaraguan political system would have improved, but the country was heading in the same direction of instability.

Solórzano moved to Miami when he was 18 and planned to study architecture at Miami Dade College.

"I adored architecture, but I knew I wasn't going to finish doing that," said Solórzano.

He entered the Diocesan Clergy and was in the seminary for three years. He studied philosophy in Miami Dade College and received his Bachelor of Arts degree. After completing his education, he was introduced to the Dominican Order.

"What attracted me to the Dominicans is their ease of talking about the truth, first with themselves and then with subjects that are difficult," said Solórzano.

Solórzano has been a priest since December 1995. Director of Campus Ministry Fr. Scott O'Brien was his mentor. They worked together at St. Thomas More Parish at Tulane University.

"Marcelo has certainly grown as preacher and teacher, bringing his theological sophistication to bear on how he exercises his pastoral care of people," said O'Brien. "I can see this in his easy-going manner, his graciousness and hospitality, his fine sense of humor and keen psychological insight, which are even more apparent than they were 15 years ago when we worked together."

Solórzano was transferred to Barry from St. Dominic Church to help with the Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults (RCIA) program. Starting in the spring, he will be teaching Theology: Faith, Beliefs and Traditions (THE 201) and a course covering Christianity spirituality and prayer, something senior theology major Rebekah Evans is looking forward to.

"I think it will be interesting to have a spirituality and prayer course at Barry, something we haven't had before," said Evans.

Solórzano is excited to teach the new course that focuses on his dissertation on finding spirituality and prayer, not only for one's self, but for one's community.

Rev. Solórzano poses by the Peace Pole after celebrating daily Mass that he regularly conducts. Starting in the spring, he will begin teaching two Theology courses.

High Expectations for This Year's Founders' Week

Week has honored the founders of the college, Bishop Patrick Barry, Mother Mary Gerald Barry, Monsignor William Barry and John Thompson, whom Thompson Hall is named after. As a friend of the family, Thompson helped Monsignor Barry choose the site where the university stands today. He later became the mayor of Miami Shores in 1944.

The annual event takes place near Nov. 15, Bishop Barry's birthday.

Other events include a lecture on social and global matters at a Catholic university and "Plant the Campus Red!" where students will decorate the campus with red plants. The Barry Community Fest will be held in the campus mall area. Featuring multiple food vendors with various carnival and games, the event is open to the local community.

"Each year they've gotten better," said senior Fred Day. "They're not as good as they could be because it seems many students don't know about the events taking place."

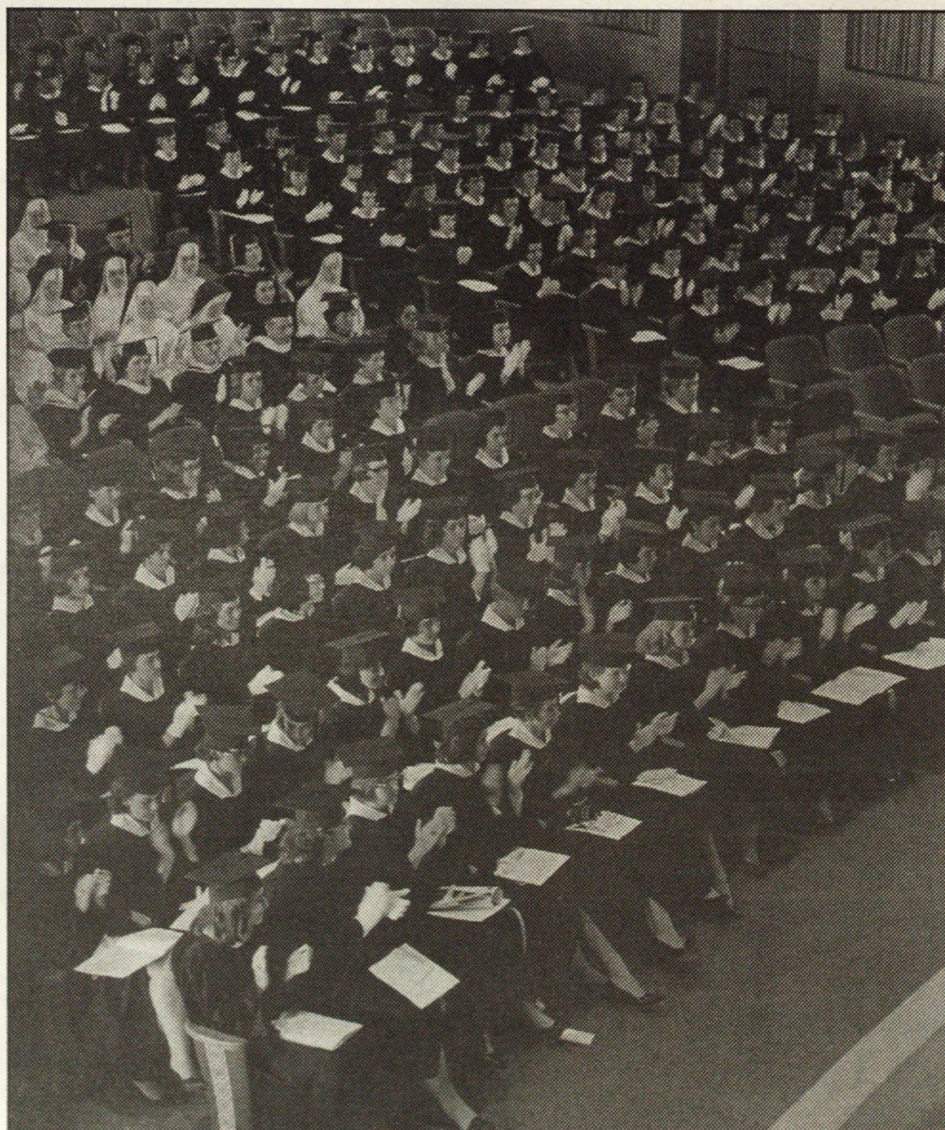

Many of the events that took place last year were during class, mentioned sophomore Ariel Dye.

"Founders Week was okay last year. I remember going to some of the events in between class hours," said Dye. "It was sort of an inconvenience."

However, Dye said she wished there were more events that would appeal to students and work within their schedules.

To end the week, a Mass will take place on Friday, Nov. 13 in the chapel.

"It's a really huge event here at Barry," said Moncayo. "Last year we had over 800 students, faculty and staff, and it's just really nice to see everyone out each year."

In 1965, Barry University was an all-girl's school. Here, the senior class gathers during Founder's Day on Nov. 15 for a ceremony in the auditorium.

Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Flu?

same as seasonal flu," said Hill.

Students who are infected should stay at home or in their dorm, rest, drink plenty of fluids and take medication as needed. Depending on the institution, there are different guidelines that the U.S. secretaries of education and health have promoted, including having a buddy who can help take care of a sick student so the disease is not spread further among the general population.

"No students have had to go to the hospital so far," said Hill. "At this point, thankfully, Barry has a fairly healthy population."

The ten-minute nasal-swab test differentiates between Influenza A, indicating H1N1, and Influenza B, signifying the seasonal flu.

Infected students with a roommate simply need to wash their hands regularly, and follow the "respiratory etiquette" mentioned by Sebelius, such as coughing and sneezing into their elbow.

When asked if there were any isolation rooms to separate sick residents, Hill explained that the flu is dangerous when there are respiratory complications like asthma. As for the seasonal flu, students are encouraged to get their flu shot and an H1N1 vaccine that is administered through a nasal spray.

The Student Health Center is working with the Miami-Dade Health Department to obtain the vaccine. In October, students and faculty were given a survey to see who would want the vaccine and will make decisions as to how to distribute it.

"I don't want to get sick, so I'll get the flu shot and the swine flu vaccine," said freshman Anais Valdez. "It's hit Florida, and since a lot of people who come to Barry are out-of-state, it's important for us to get the flu shot in order to be cautious."

Although some students, including freshman Collin Brown, haven't read the e-mails about H1N1 sent by Barry, as a resident, he is aware that he should "use a lot of hand sanitizer" and stay in his dorm room if he gets the swine flu. Brown said he didn't think he would get the vaccine even if it were available at the Student Health Center.

"If I get it, I'll just let my body work it out," he said.

What is your name?

Bucky the Buccaneer aka "The Parrot."

Where do you live?

I live in the highest tree by the Sports and Recreation Center.

How old are you Bucky, in bird years that is?

I am 16 years old.

What satisfies those taste buds of yours?

Mmm...I love crackers and cold water. YUM!

If you could marry any bird, who would it be?

I haven't really thought about marriage, so I don't really know. I would like to let the ladybirds know I am single and ready to mingle! I am looking for that special someone!

What is the wildest thing you have ever done at a game?

Well, I had the opportunity to get together with the dance team and work on some moves and perform them at Moonlight Madness about two years ago! That's as wild as I will get.

Bucky, where is your family? You're always alone at the games.

It's sad to say I have no mommy or daddy, but I consider the community at Barry University my family! They have taken care of me since I was a baby bird.

Last, what makes you the bomb diggity mascot?

Well, because I have swagger and will always be number one!

Defeat: In the Lady Bucs' Vocab?

KALEMA MEGGS
KALEMA.MEGGS@MYMAIL.BARRY.EDU

The Lady Bucs started their pre-season on a high note with a record 7-1, making their performance in the regular season particularly disappointing. After a recent string of 12 losses, their conference record is a grim 2-6.

"We had an intense pre-season, and I felt like it was paying off with all of our wins," said sophomore Libby Walter, one of the team's setters. "It felt pretty good during that long-winning streak, and it was definitely a boost of confidence."

"We've had countless team meetings to discuss the problem," admits Walter.

Senior Julia Ridley, one of the team's outside hitters, said she has constructively examined her own performance and recognized ways she could improve.

"I'll go from leading scorer with 15 kills one game, to hitting negative the next, even if I came into the game confident," said Ridley.

Walter, who has been playing volleyball since she was 14, believes confidence plays a major role in the team's performance.

"We did come out very strong, and our confidence and heart were there, but I think after a few losses, the team begins to lose hope," adds Ridley.

Lovisa Johansson (14) Stefanie Sveiven (15) and Spenser Rigg (11) take a time-out to listen to their coach. Despite a less-than-stellar regular season, the Lady Bucs are optimistic about the remainder of the season.

The team won against Palm Beach Atlantic on Oct. 22. Hopefully this signifies the beginning of the team finding their confidence before their season ends in mid November.

"Volleyball has got to be the most team-oriented sport I can think of," said Ridley. "If one link of the chain is broken, you lose the integrity of the entire chain. Each person has a job to do that reflects on the other. If you can't get a pass, you can't get a set, so you can't get a hit... If you can't lock up your block, your defense can't dig."

Practicing together every day, these athletes are in tune with one another.

"If one's moral is down, it's often contagious to all the others," explained Ridley. "We're like sisters; you have to trust your teammate or the chemistry on the court disappears."

While Ridley and Walter admit to what can make or break the team, they still have high hopes, as does fellow teammate junior Spenser Rigg.

"I play with a great group of girls, and I couldn't think of a better group to play and bond with. We are all like sisters," said Rigg, who plays libero, another term for outside hitter.

Although the team has a lot to work on for the remainder of the season, Rigg believes the team is still a force to be reckoned with.

"I believe that we still have a chance to make it to conference. We just need to use the same tenacity, intensity and energy we use in practices and had in the beginning, and use it for the remainder of the season," said Rigg.

So, is "defeat" in the team's vocabulary?

"It has definitely been an extremely rough time, but that does not mean we are giving up," said Walter. "We still have time to turn this season around, and we all know that."

With the team's sense of unity going strong, the Lady Bucs have the potential to turn things around for this season.
